

Elf Crash Murphy: Hello everyone, Elf Crash Murphy here of North Pole Radio News, sitting in today for Elf Frank Myrrh who is a bit under the weather. Thanksgiving week festivities are going to be a little different this year, we just aren't sure yet how different they will be. Influencing things is the crisis in Santa's Workshop. I'm joined today by an elf with a bit of a different perspective who comes from the Department of Redundancy Department. That's the department in charge of double checking that everything is ready for Santa to deliver on Christmas Eve. From the Department of Redundancy Department, I'm joined by Elf Pete Peters. Pete, how are we ever going to make sure that everything is double checked if the workshop is so far behind?

Elf Pete Peters: I'll tell ya, Crash, what we're going to do, then I'll explain what we're going to do, then I'll tell ya what I just told ya.

Elf Crash: That figures.

Elf Pete Peters: That's what we do, Crash. First of all, so far, we're on top of it. With the workshop pumping out stuff at the fastest rate in history last week, we're proud to say that it all checks out so far. They stuff is good, it looks great, and it is packed well.

Elf Crash: Yeah, it's also the 20th of November, Pete.

Elf Pete Peters: I know what the date is, Crash. We keep that on a list, too, and I check it twice a day whether it needs it or not.

Elf Crash: Imagine that. But will you be able to say on December 20th that you're in as good of shape then as you are now?

Elf Pete Peters: Yes, it's on our list to say exactly that.

Elf Crash: Good enough, Pete, thanks for that redundant report. Let's check in now with Elf Westover for what trackers need to know today.

Elf Westover: Trackers around the world. There are 33 days until Santa's launch. The chat with Elf Crash Murphy is on Sunday at 3 P.M. Eastern Standard Time. As Santa said, chat with Elf Crash will be very important this week. If you want certain information, join the chat and ask questions. This is Elf Westover signing off. Wishing you a Merry Christmas and remember, stay jolly.

Elf Crash: Thanks Elf Westover, fine report. We will see you in North Pole Chat on Sunday. From the North Pole, where the Department of Redundancy Department leaves no stone unturned, I'm Elf Crash Murphy reporting for SantaUpdate.com on the Kringle Radio Network.