

Elf Holly Berry: Greetings! I'm Elf Holly Berry reporting from the Special Assignment Desk for North Pole Radio News. Santa's workshop is officially just 58 days behind schedule with 33 days remaining until Santa launches from the North Pole. Reporting for us now with an update from the Workshop is North Pole radio news reporter, Elf Roz. Roz, how are the workshop elves feeling this week?

Elf Roz: There was a loud cheer that went up from the elves when it was announced over the loud speaker that they made up 14 days in the past week, Holly. That is a significant dent in their deficit.

Elf Holly: That is outstanding news. Do they think they can keep up that pace?

Elf Roz: That is really impossible to know, Holly. Even the elves in charge say that's impossible to predict at this stage because they don't know what is in their control. I can tell you that a big effort is being made to keep the workshop running non-stop. They aren't slowing down for weekends or holidays or anything.

Elf Holly: Does that mean no break for the elves this week in the workshop even for Thanksgiving?

Elf Roz: No, Holly. I spoke with Elf Bernard, who said management was offering Thursday as a voluntary work day. But Elf Ginger, who is the Elf Union rep, said she believes all elves plan to report to work and will forego their usual Thanksgiving festivities.

Elf Holly Berry: Wow, that's --- a little sad, we've got to be able to do something for them! Thanks for that report Roz. From the North Pole News Desk, where we're going to check with Mrs. Claus about getting Thanksgiving meals sent to Santa's Workshop, I'm Elf Holly Berry reporting for SantaUpdate.com on the Kringle Radio Network.
